

Kris Hodgson

The Future of Learning

Kris works tirelessly to educate the community on how virtual reality could transform the future of education.

Kris Hodgson is the chair of the school of Media and Design as well as an instructor in the Digital Communications and Media program at Lethbridge College. He has been a writer and photographer for various publications across western Canada for the last 16 years. The completion of work on his master's degree in Virtual Reality/360-degree journalism (2017) from the University of Alberta in the Communication and Technology program (MACT) kick-started applied research opportunities at Lethbridge College in the fall of 2017. This exciting research applies to the ever-evolving world of journalism and its adjustments to a new medium.